The Sub Committee are placed in an embarassing position if recommendations for exemptions from the operation of rules of recruitment are made long after the appointments are made and therefore suggest to Government the desirability of suitable instructions being issued in the matter for the guidance of appointing officers.

From an examination of the several recommendations for exemption received from the Chief Court, the Committee find that in most of the cases exemptions have been recommended long after the appointments are made — thus rendering the grant of exemption by the Committee a merely formal matter.

The Committee desire to suggest in this connection the advisability of suitable instructions being issued to all appointing officers to seek for Exemption in such cases before making the appointments.
